Ajit Pai
FCC Chairman

Dear Mr. Pai,

I'm submitting these comments in response to the recently announced notice of proposed rulemaking related to possible changes in FTC oversight of the internet. I'm fervently opposed to any changes that loosen oversight, change regulations, or reverse the standards of net neutrality. The internet is a de facto public utility that needs to be managed in a way that is fair to consumers and provides an even playing field for corporations. It is unconscionable to consider changes that benefit corporations, limit competition, and allow organizations to dictate the speed at which specific content makes its way to consumers. Internet providers should provide unconstrained portals to the internet.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment,
